Subject: Microsoft Antitrust

There is an opportunity at this juncture to demonstrate that the Laws of the Land are enforced and fairly applied regardless of monetary or political clout. There has been a determination of violation of the antitrust statutes by Microsoft. A remedy must be imposed that is significant and serves to correct the market imbalance caused by the violation. Due to the advanced stage of market domination achieved through monopolistic practices, it is imperative that remedies must be focused on opening and leveling the playing field. Such remedies must be continuing and monitored for effectiveness and should not be restricted to one time financial penalties (no matter how large). It is clear that a meaningful remedy will have similar aspects as affirmative action. Effectively, it is necessary for Microsoft to be put at a disadvantage to its competitors until sufficient balance in the market is achieved for open and fair competition to succeed. Aspects to consider include:

1. Limitation of the practice of the bundling of software with hardware purchases to allow consumer choice without incurring cost penalties.
2. Ensuring that the details of the structure of the Microsoft operating system and industry standard application file structure is made available to all application developers to equal extent.
3. Requiring Microsoft to provide application programming interfaces to its operating system for use by application developers of all types.
